Haircut alert - Cincinnati's black gospel WCVG, Covington, KY (1320) is sold for $450,000, and the buyer is Tracie Hunter. She began LMAing the station from Davidson Media earlier this year, and it's one of the stations that Peter Davidson was going to take with him last year, when he peeled away a dozen stations from Davidson Media Group to form the Golden Door group. WCVG's earlier distinction is that it was the nation's first all-Elvis station, years ago. It has 500 watts daytime and 430 watts at night. Davidson acquired it in late 2006 from Richard Plessinger - and back then, paid $1,970,000.

San Diego's former KSON-AM at 1240 is sold to longtime LMA partner Arthur Liu, and the price is $7.25 million. Liu's been running a brokered format on the station that flipped to brokered Christian teaching back in January. It also took new call letters of KNSN, to distinguish itself from "Country 97" KSON-FM, which Lincoln Financial Media retains. Arthur Liu's Multicultural Radio Broadcasting has been leasing the 1240 frequency for nearly six years, since July 2003. In those days, the station was owned by Jefferson-Pilot. Broker Michael Bergner notes that "the closing was delayed when a storm damaged the tower in late 2005." KNSN operates with 550 watts, day and night. Bergner was the sole broker working on the deal - which just closed.

Clear Channel's debt woes are playing out in public...at least in the pages of the New York Post, which has taken an interest - a kind of negative interest - in the company lately. Its business writers report that "Clear Channel's efforts to avert bankruptcy hit a patch of static [last week], after two senior lenders opposed the company's debt-swap proposal." First, "bankruptcy" is an event that's well down the pike, if it ever happens. (Lots of folks believe it won't.) And second, the one-year anniversary of the Bain Capital/Thomas H. Lee Partners deal isn't even due for another two months, on July 30. The Post reports that "senior lenders are being offered in part
